It is to be noted always, and everywhere, that Mormon prophets and apostles use the phrase "the kingdom of God" as referring, not to the spiritual reign of Christ, but to the material and political supremacy of the Mormon priesthood as "the only legal government that can exist in any part of the universe." There can be no other authorized government on earth, or in heaven, but this rule of the Mormon hierarchy—so they teach and so they practice. Hence they have a priestly statute that practically bars

For sprains, bruises, burns, scalds and similar injuries, there is nothing so good as Chamberlain's Pain Balm. Just so sure as the extremities are the nerve center of the physical body, just so sure is polygamy the center nerve of the Mormon church.

The Mormon church, although the leaders declare to the contrary, always has since the first few years of its inauguration, sought supremacy. Even the lay members have been taught to believe that the Mormon church would become in time, not only the ruling power of the United States, but of the whole world. The present officials of the church have been taught this from their early childhood, and they cling to the believe with the utmost tenacity. No amount of opposition turns them from their course Reasoning amounts to nothing, persuasion is of no avail. They stubbornly go their own way in their case, the maxim of the Greeks and Romans can well be applied. "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad."

Although the church is but a handful compared to this Nation, yet under the crafty influence of the leaders they are a handful of vipers, watching for an opportunity to strike poisonous fangs to some vital spot of the Nation which has kindly fostered them. They were taken into that Nation under pledge of fealty, as one of her honored family, yet the leaders have not only broken that pledge, but are inciting their followers to do the same, leading them blindfolded into the belief that this Nation, the truest friend they have is their blitterest enemy. This view many, too many, of them accept; but those who have had the opportunity to investigate the true state of affairs, and are farsighted and possess chough intelligence to comprehend the true state of
